- Q. 6 Read the following passage and answer the questions appended to it:

In every society, there are certain norms and rules laid down as behaviour patterns that have to be followed in order to live a harmonious, peaceful life. But a number of people completely overlook even the most elementary etiquettes and manners and go about their usual duties without the least concern on what expected behaviour patterns are. For example, manners begin at home. Home is the starting point of our lives from where we begin our journey to learn. But more often than not, manners are displayed everywhere but at home because house becomes 'full playground' where you do as you like.

We should try to be well-behaved no matter where we are, leading a helping hand, where needed, standing in a queue and waiting our turn. Manners make the whole world a civilized place to live in. We would all go back to living pre-historic lives where the attitude to 'Survival of the fittest' worked best.

In the core of our hearts, the need to prove oneself is tremendous. We all want to be 'Super' in most things, to excel, for who wants a loser. In the attempt to excel, we end up being super exhausted, super depressed and super failures as well.

When expectations to do well, push one to limits beyond what we are capable of, the end result is frightening at times. Therefore, it is important to do your best, but not to pressurize yourself too much.

Its' time to tell yourself, you can only try to do your best, genuinely and sincerely. If you do not make it to the slot you want, there are always second chances and options open to you.

Your happiness, a tension free existence is of greater value than a depressed, stress filled existence.
